Just another year has passed for all the knights and ladies at the Round Table, this one marking our 7th anniversary! And, as predicted, we passed the 5000 registered members mark (an increase by almost 1000 since the last anniversary). No news of an army book yet, but who knows what this year brings.

Our traditional celebrations will last until the end of the year, and as every year you can already wet your brushes and sharpen your pencils in preparation of the competitions to be announced. For the first time, this anniversary we will also have an "open" contest category, in which you can submit anything you like such as ideas, drafts, drawings, or other Bretonnian art. The theme of this year's anniversary will be the Errantry War. After seven years, we feel like our crusade finally reaches an end. You can still submit anything you like in the contests, but bonus points will be awarded for following the theme.

Watch the site frontpage and this announcement for further information about the events to come.

Update: Both deadlines are extended until December 10th.

- The Anniversary Painting (and open art) competition 2012
- The Anniversary Literature competition 2012
